

32 Engravings Of Paul Revere: American Engraver (December 21, 1734 - May 10, 1818)

Paul Revere was a prominent American engraver, patriot, and silversmith. He is best known for his engraving of The Boston Massacre, which helped to galvanize public opinion against the British government and played a role in the American Revolution. Revere also played a key role in the American Revolution as a messenger and spy.

Revere was born in Boston, Massachusetts, on December 21, 1734. He was the son of Apollos Rivoire, a French Huguenot, and Deborah Hichborn, an English woman. Revere's father changed the family name to Revere after immigrating to America.

Revere began his apprenticeship as an engraver at the age of 13. He quickly became a skilled engraver and began producing a variety of works, including bookplates, currency, and portraits. Revere also engraved political cartoons and satires, which often criticized the British government.

In 1775, Revere was commissioned to engrave The Boston Massacre. The engraving was based on a painting by Henry Pelham and depicted the events of March 5, 1770, when British soldiers fired on a crowd of colonists, killing five people. Revere's engraving was widely circulated and helped to turn public opinion against the British government.

Revere also played a key role in the American Revolution as a messenger and spy. In April 1775, Revere was sent by the Massachusetts Committee of Safety to warn Samuel Adams and John Hancock that British troops were planning to arrest them. Revere's ride from Boston to Lexington and Concord is one of the most famous events in American history.

Revere continued to engrave throughout his life. He produced a wide variety of works, including portraits, landscapes, and historical scenes. Revere died in Boston on May 10, 1818, at the age of 83.
