Zarankin's journey begins with a chance encounter with a bird in her backyard. She is immediately captivated by the bird's beauty and grace, and she begins to learn more about birds. Soon, she is hooked on birding, and she spends her free time exploring the natural world in search of new species.

Zarankin's memoir is full of funny and heartwarming stories about her birding adventures. She writes about the time she got lost in the woods while looking for a rare warbler, and the time she was chased by a flock of angry geese. She also writes about the friends she has made through birding, and the sense of community she has found among fellow bird enthusiasts.

But Field Notes From An Unintentional Birder is more than just a collection of funny stories. It is also a celebration of the natural world and the importance of conservation. Zarankin writes about the threats that birds face, such as habitat loss and climate change. She also writes about the importance of protecting birds and their habitats.

Field Notes From An Unintentional Birder is a must-read for anyone who loves birds, nature, or humor. Zarankin's writing is witty and observant, and her love of birds is infectious. Her memoir is a celebration of the unexpected joys of birding, and it is sure to inspire readers to get out and explore the natural world.
