Chapter 1: The South

The book begins with the author's childhood in the South. She describes growing up in a segregated town, where she was often the only black child in her class. She writes about the racism she experienced from her white classmates and teachers, and how this racism made her feel isolated and alone.

Despite the racism she faced, the author also found love and support in her family and community. She writes about her close relationship with her grandmother, who taught her the importance of self-love and resilience. She also writes about her involvement in the civil rights movement, which gave her a sense of hope and purpose.

Chapter 2: The North

After graduating from high school, the author moved to the North to attend college. She was excited to start a new chapter in her life, but she quickly realized that racism was just as prevalent in the North as it was in the South. She writes about the microaggressions she experienced from her white professors and classmates, and how these microaggressions made her feel like she didn't belong.

Despite the racism she faced, the author also found love and support in the North. She met a group of friends who shared her experiences and who helped her to feel less alone. She also became involved in the Black Lives Matter movement, which gave her a sense of community and purpose.

Chapter 3: Love

The author writes about her experiences with love, both romantic and platonic. She writes about her first love, a white boy who broke her heart. She also writes about her current relationship with a black man, who loves and supports her unconditionally.

The author's experiences with love have taught her the importance of self-love and acceptance. She has learned that she is worthy of love, regardless of her race or gender. She has also learned that love is a powerful force that can overcome racism and other forms of oppression.

Chapter 4: Revolution

The author writes about her involvement in the Black Lives Matter movement. She describes the protests and demonstrations she has participated in, and how these experiences have changed her life. She has learned the importance of speaking out against injustice, and she has become more committed to fighting for a better world.

The author believes that revolution is necessary to create a more just and equitable society. She calls for a revolution of love, a revolution that will tear down the walls of racism, sexism, and classism. She believes that this revolution is possible, and she is determined to be a part of it.

My Long Song of Relocation, Race, Love, and Revolution: American Crossroads 60 is a powerful and moving memoir that explores the complexities of race, love, and revolution in the United States. The author's experiences are both personal and universal, and her story will resonate with anyone who has ever felt marginalized or oppressed. The book is a call to action, a call for a revolution of love that will create a more just and equitable world.
