I grew up without my father. He left when I was two years old, and I never saw him again. All I knew about him was what my mother told me. She said he was a good man who had been fighting for a just cause.

As I got older, I started to wonder more about my father. I wanted to know who he was, and what had happened to him. I started to search for him, but I didn't know where to start.

One day, I was talking to my aunt, and she told me that my father had been in prison. She said he had been arrested for his involvement in the Cuban Revolution.

I was shocked. I had never known that my father had been in prison. I started to ask my aunt more about him, and she told me that he had been a leader in the prison yard. He had organized the prisoners and led them in protests against the guards.

My aunt told me that my father was a hero to the other prisoners. He was a symbol of hope and resistance. He gave them the strength to fight for their freedom.

I was proud of my father. I realized that he was a good man who had made a difference in the world. I also realized that he was a deadbeat dad. He had left me and my mother when I was two years old, and he had never come back.

I didn't know how to feel about my father. I was proud of him, but I was also angry with him. I wanted to know why he had left me. I wanted to know why he had never come back.

I started to search for my father, but I didn't know where to start. I didn't know his name, and I didn't know where he was. I only knew that he had been in prison in Cuba.

I started by searching online. I looked for information about Cuban prisons, and I looked for information about my father. I found a few articles about the prison where my father had been held, but I couldn't find any information about him.

I started to lose hope. I thought I would never find my father. But then, one day, I had a breakthrough. I found a website that had a list of Cuban political prisoners. I searched the list, and I found my father's name.

I was so excited. I finally had a way to contact my father. I sent him a letter, and I waited for a response.

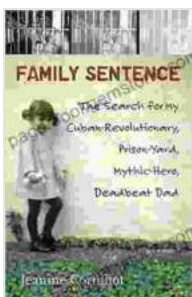

A few weeks later, I received a letter from my father. He was so happy to hear from me. He told me that he had been thinking about me every day since he left. He told me that he was proud of me, and that he loved me.

My father and I started to write to each other regularly. We got to know each other, and we started to build a relationship. I learned that my father was a good man who had made a mistake. He had left me and my mother when I was two years old, but he had never stopped loving me.

I forgave my father for leaving me. I realized that he was a human being, and that he had made a mistake. I also realized that he loved me, and that he wanted to be a part of my life.

My father and I have a relationship now. We talk on the phone every week, and we visit each other every year. I am so grateful to have him in my life. He is my hero, and I love him very much.
